46 THOSE BEAUTIFUL AMBROTYPES."

BEWARE OF NEW NOTIONS.—The newly-inrented Picture-on Glass—commonly called the AMBROTYPE is made attROOT'S Deguarreian Gelleries for all who particularly desisest. But it is no more than justice to the public to say that Ambrotypes are, for several reasons, the least valuable of any Pictures yet made. These reasons are apparant. The Ambrotype is made on glass, and of course is extremely liable to head, and when broken that is the last of it. As an instance, take the case of a gentleman who called recantly to get a froken Ambrotypes copied. It was the only Potrate of a wife who had died suddenly away from home. On the return of the affiliested husband, in spite of the utmost care, some of the railroad baggage-mushers had so knocked his trank about as to break due picture. The misforture was irreparable, and the husband-in-pocking about, breaking of glass, kc., and yet come out uninarmed.

It is further usered that the Ambrotyne is durable. Thus cut unharmed.

It is further used that the Androtype is durable. Thus far many of them have failed to etand the effects of host and cold; they scale off, blister and spot in various ways, so that it is not ancommon for them to become worthism in a few (age after they are made, as every one must know who as few (age after they are made, as every one must know who has noticed some of the show cases slong Broadway for the host noticed some of the show cases slong Broadway for the past few months. But the Daguerreotype has stood the test for lifteen years; and we have pictures made a dozen years ago, which are so clear and expressive as when first taken. Silver plates never break or change in character, but glass is "mighty thorstain,"

Plates never break or change in character, was grantly better the muddy and disagreeable shades of the Ambrety ser-there being none of those delicate tints which so agreeably harmonize in the Daguerrectype, and are still further elaborated in the enquisitely finished Photographs at S.OOTS. Ambrotypes seem to have been taken in the supernatural gives of some phastly meteoric light, while the Daguerrectype eccuse all the soft and agreeable has of a variable Emmer day. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

THE AMBROTYFE.
Some members of the daguerrean fraternity have represented the Ambrotype—the latest and best improvement in the art—as unworthy of public confidence. As these representations proteed from those who are deburred by the provisions of the patent from making the Ambrotype, they are not worthy of consideration. Mr. BRADY, the introducer of the AMBROTYFE in New-York, has found in them a combination of rare qualities, never approached by any other style of camera pictures. Three months have sufficed to demonstrate their superiority, and the great demand for them at his Gallery interprets the good will evidenced by the cotemporaries in their assaults upon the "Glass Pictures."

"One thing is positive, and we all perceived it that night—tragedy is not the least in the world to the American taste, it is a great deal too serious, a great deal too magisterial, and, above all, a great deal too cold for them. The foregoing is a true narrative of actual events. Whatever of romance it contains is the romance of real life. It exhibits the rickless wiles of the kidnapper, in luring his victims from the Free States; their long and patient andurance of the heavy yelle of Slavery; the even living hope of freedom which saminated Peter Still; his strong domestic feedings, shown in the presistent efforts which he made, after his own ransom, to severe the means—$5,000-to purchase the freedom of his wife and three children; the ready sympathy of those who heard his affecting appeals; and the cheering success which finally crowned his efforts.
